From the Corner Office

It's probably obvious to say, but one of the primary goals of any business is to make sure it stays in business...and grows. These days, there is a developing issue that if not addressed, can halt a company in its tracks: the significant increase in the number and scope of environmental compliance imperatives across all state and local regulatory environments.

In Focus: Water Safety

It's called the 8x8 rule: Drink eight 8-ounce glasses of water every day to avoid dehydration and maintain your balance of body fluids. Water, after all, is a necessity of life. In a world where so many people have to travel miles to get their water from the nearest source, we are lucky to live in a country where clean, safe water is available at the turn of a tap.

Spotlight: Chris Gulics

Let's be honest: regulatory compliance is not exactly the sexiest profession out there. But it is certainly one of the most important if a business wants to stay in business.

Chris Gulics came to PS&S in 2015 along with three colleagues during a transitional period in the Monmouth/Ocean County engineering consulting world. Currently, Chris is the company's Senior Director of Environmental Regulatory Compliance and heads up a team of five professionals whose job is to make sure our clients are following all regulatory permitting and compliance. Chris and his team know the current guidelines and regulations so our clients can focus on their businesses.
